Lobanov-Rostovsky, Nikita D., 'Sir Isaiah Berlin, Oxford and I', Numbers no. 3 (2000), 20–1

- Russian trans. in a Russian collection: Mikhail Parkhomovsky and Andrey Rogachevsky (eds), Russian Jews in Great Britain: Articles, Publications, Memoirs and Essays [Russian Jewry Abroad, vol. 2] (Jerusalem, 2000: Mikhail Parkhomovsky), 36–40

NB. The author knew Berlin's wife, the daughter of a St Petersburg banker. When Lobanov turned eighteen, before his enrolment in Oxford University, he also met Isaiah Maksimovich [sic] himself. Lobanov listened to Berlin's description of Oxford and its students' lifestyle. Many years later he found out from Berlin why he [Lobanov] was awarded an Oxford scholarship (Berlin was a member of the grant awarding committee).
